What is a Hoosier?

Hoosier is the nickname given to residents of Indiana. No one has been able to trace the exact origin of the word, but historians believe its use dates back at least 160 years. Here are a few of the popular theories about where the word came from:

One story says when visitors knocked on the door of a pioneer's cabin in Indiana, the cabin's owner would respond, "Who's yere?" From this frequent response, the story claims Indiana became the "Who's yere," or Hoosier, state.

A theory offered by Governor Joseph Wright (served 1849-1857) says the word Hoosier came from the Indian word for corn: "hoosa." Workers from Indiana taking corn to New Orleans came to be known as "hoosa men" or Hoosiers. Unfortunately for this theory, a search of Indian vocabularies failed to reveal any such word for corn.

Another story explains there was once a man named Hoosier employed on the Louisville and Portland Canals who preferred to hire workers from Indiana. His employees were called "Hoosier's men" and eventually the name spread to include all people from Indiana.

The theory with the most evidence to support it, however, says "Hoosier" was used in the 1800s in the South to describe people who lived in the woods or the hills. The word is believed to come from the Anglo-Saxon word "hoo," which means hill. Settlers moving from the South to the Ohio Valley brought the word with them and used it to describe the people they encountered living in southern Indiana. Later, "Hoosier" evolved to include any person living in Indiana.

How a Bill ...

Bill Introduction

The first step in creating a law is for a representative or senator to write the bill. Then the bill is read by its author in its chamber of origin.

First Reading

The bill is presented to the House or the Senate. Then the Speaker of the House or the President of the Senate (depending on its chamber of origin) assigns it to a committee.

Committee Reading

The committee's responsibility is to decide what is good about a bill and talk about any changes that could improve the bill. Anyone can attend a committee meeting to discuss his or her likes or dislikes about a bill. After the meeting, the members report back to the House or Senate. If the committee does not vote or votes against the bill, it cannot become law.

Second Reading

When the bill is brought before the House or Senate for a second reading, legislators have the opportunity to ask for amendments to the bill. The senators or representatives may or may not get what they ask for.

Third Reading

Next, the full chamber of origin will discuss the bill. Then legislators will vote to pass or defeat the bill. A majority of at least 51 votes are needed for the bill to pass in the House; 26 votes in the Senate. If the bill passes, it is sent to the other chamber and the process starts over. Both chambers must complete this process before a bill can become a law.

After passing in both chambers, the bill goes to (top of facing page):

Conference Committee

After the bill has been considered by both chambers, one of three things can happen:

1. The bill can be approved without changes.
2. The bill can be changed in the second chamber. If this happens, it must be returned to the first chamber so the changes can be approved. If at least 51 representatives or 26 senators agree to the changes, the bill goes on to the governor. However, if the majority of the original chamber disagrees with the amendments, the bill is sent to a conference committee. A conference committee is made up of two representatives and two senators. The four legislators attempt to combine the two different versions of the bill so they all agree. If they can agree, a conference report is then voted on by both the House and the Senate. If both chambers approve the amended bill, it is sent to the governor. If the chambers do not approve the amended bill, it cannot become a law.
3. The second chamber defeats the bill by vote in committee, by vote of the entire chamber or by not voting on it at all.

The Governor

Once the bill reaches this point, the governor can either sign the bill into law, veto the bill or do nothing. If the governor does not act on the bill within seven days, the bill automatically becomes law without a signature.

Veto Override

Even if the governor vetoes a bill, it can still become law if 51 representatives and 26 senators vote to override the governor's veto.

Once the bill passes all of these steps, it ...
